Dear Dr. Henney:

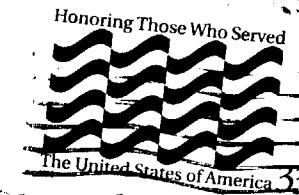

Consumers realize that a tomato that is part fish is not just another tomato. That the FDA does not is puzzling, and that it did not require safety testing for this and the other unique food products of bioengineering shatters any notion we may have had about the FDA's stringent standards. We are entitled to know that our food is safe, not guess. Failing that, we are entitled to know which food is which. Genetically modified food must be labeled.

J.E.A. Sincerely,

Margaret Jones.
